You, the elected representatives of our Republican Party have again given to me the highest honor you can bestow -- your nomination for President of the United States.

I thank you with all my heart for your friendship and confidence. I am profoundly sensible of the responsibility that goes with it. I accept your nomination. In all humility, I pray God that I may deserve this opportunity to serve our country.

I come to you unfettered by any obligation or promise to any living person, free to join with you in selecting to serve our nation the finest man and statesman in the nation, free to unite our Party and our country in meeting the grave challenge of our time.

United we can meet this challenge with depth of understanding and largeness of spirit; with a unity which is above discrimination, above partisanship, above self-interest. These are graces of faith from which the greatness of America has been fashioned. Our people are eager to once again the upholding power of that faith. They are urging us to put such faith at the heart of our national life. That is what we are called to do. That is what we will do.

In this historic convention, you have had placed before you six other candidates, all high-minded men of character and ability and deeply devoted to their country -- Senator Bourbon B. Bolling, General Douglas MacArthur, Governor Harold H. Stassen, Senator Robert A. Taft, Senator Arthur Vandenberg, and Governor Earl Warren. It has been a difficult choice in an honorable contest. It has been a stirring demonstration of the life and vitality and ideals of our Republican Party.

There has been honest contention, spirited disagreement, not argument. But let no one be misled. You have given moving and dramatic proof of how Americans, who honestly differ, close ranks and move forward, for the nation’s well-being, shoulder to shoulder.

The responsibility and the opportunity that have come to our Party are the greatest in the history of free government. Our tonight our future -- our peace, our prosperity, the very fate of freedom -- hangs in a precarious balance.

More victory in an election is not our task or our purpose. Our task is to fill our victory with such meaning that mankind everywhere, learning for freedom, will take heart and move forward out of this despairing darkness into the light of freedom’s promise.

Our platform proclaims the guidelines that will mark our steadfast and certain endeavor in a fearful world. This magnificent statement of principles is sound and to the point.

You unanimously adopted it. I proudly support it. It will be the heart of the message I will take to the country. After January 20th, it will be the cornerstone of our Republican administration.

We are a united Party. Our nation stands tragically in need of that same unity.

Our people are turning away from the meaner things that divide us. They yearn to move to higher ground, to find a common purpose in the finer things which unite us. We must be the instrument of that aspiration. We must be the means by which America’s full powers are released and this uncertain future filled again, with opportunity. That is our pledge. That will be the fruit of our victory.

If this unity is to be won and kept, it must have great dimensions. Its boundaries must be far above and beyond politics. Freedom can be saved — it can only be saved — if free men everywhere make this unity their common cause.

Unity in such a cause must be the chief cornerstone of peace. A peace won at the expense of liberty is a peace too dearly bought. Such a peace would not endure. Above all other purposes, we must labor by every peaceful means to build a world order founded upon justice and righteousness. That kind of world will have peace. That kind of peace will be worth having. That is the growing responsibility that our people have laid upon us. That is the crowning task to which we dedicate ourselves.

The unity we seek is more than material. It is more than a net of things and measures. It is most of all spiritual. Our problem is not outside ourselves. Our problem is within ourselves. We have found the means to blow our world, physically, apart. Spiritually, we have yet to find the means to put together the world’s broken pieces, to bind up its wounds, to make a good society, a community of men of good will that fits our dreams. We have devised noble plans for a new world. Without a new spirit, our noblest plans will come to naught. To pray that, in the days ahead, a full measure of that spirit may be ours.

The next Presidential term will see the completion of the first half of the twentieth century. So far it has been a century of amazing progress and of terrible tragedy. To have seen the world transformed. We have seen mankind’s age-long struggle against nature crowned by extraordinary success.

Yet our triumphs have been darkened by bitter defeats in the equally ancient struggle of men to live together in peace, security and understanding. For this age of progress, this twentieth century, has been dominated by two terrible world wars and, between the wars, the worst economic depression in the history of mankind.

We must learn to do better. The period that is drawing to a close has been one of scientific achievement. The era that is opening before us must be a period of human and spiritual achievement.

We propose to continue to carry forward the great technological gains of our age. We shall harness the unimaginable possibilities of atomic energy, to bring men and women a larger, fuller life. But there is something more important than all this. With all the energy, intelligence and determination which mortal heart and mind can summon to the task, we must solve the problem of establishing a just and lasting peace in the world, and of securing to our own and other like-minded people the blessings of freedom and opportunity.

So, as a Republican in this hour 1s to dedicate one’s life to the freedom of man, as long as the world is half free and half slave, we must peaceably labor to help man everywhere to achieve liberty.

We have declared our goal to be a strong and free America in a free world of free men — free to speak their own minds, free to develop new ideas, free to publish what they believe, free to move from place to place, free to choose occupations, free to choose and use the fruits of their labor, free to worship God, and according to his own conscience of His Grace and His mercy.

When these rights are secure in the world, the permanent ideals of the Republican Party shall have been realized.

The ideals of the American people are the ideals of the Republican Party. We have lighted a beacon here in Philadelphia, in the cradle of our own independence. We have lighted a beacon to give eternal hope that man may live in liberty with human dignity and before God and loving Him, stand erect and free.
