The Communist delegation's list of December 18 contained 11,559 names:

7,112 Republic of Korea
3,198 US
913 British
236 Turks
40 Filipinos
10 French
6 Australian
4 South African
3 Japanese (apparently not in military service)
3 Canada, Greece, and Netherlands

The Republic of Korea had announced on December 7 that 38,350 N.K. soldiers were missing in action. The US at the time the lists were exchanged listed 11,559 missing in action in a letter of December 21, the US negotiators called the Communists' attention to the omission of more than one thousand names from their prisoner-of-war list. A note on the December 26 list was 31 of the 50 reported to the Red Cross on August 18, 16 of the 50 reported to the Red Cross on September 14, and 1,053 named in other sources. In a letter dated December 26, the Communists stated that of these, 7,066 had died of various causes or had escaped, and the whereabouts of 332 was unknown at that time. Late in December the UN Command called attention to Communist communiques claiming more than 65,000 prisoners.

Civilian Internes Held by the Communist Forces

The UNR claimed on December 17 that more than 80,000 south Korean civilians had been seized and taken north by the Communists. On December 30, the UN delegation reported concerning 58 non-Korean civilians: 25 French, 13 American, 9 British, 3 Irish, 2 Belgian, 1 Austrian, and 1 Australian. On January 25, the Communist radio named 48 non-Korean civilians interned, including 27 of the above-mentioned 58.

Prisoners-of-war Held by the UN

The UN December 18 reported 132,474 prisoners-of-war: 95,531 north Koreans, 20,700 Chinese, and 16,243 dissident south Koreans. The Communist delegation letter of December 26 stated that the UN list contained 1,456 fewer names than the UN had said it did, and contained 44,205 names fewer than reported to the Red Cross. The UN undertook to explain the removal of the 44,000, but as late as January 25, it was reported that the Communist delegation was pressing for information concerning 37,000 persons the UN stating that these were civilian internes. On January 26, the UN delegation presented a new list, written in Orientil characters, containing 125,080 names, 20,720 Chinese and 111,360 Koreans.

Civilians Internes in South Korea

The UN has made a statement concerning numbers of civilian internes or of refugees under its control. The UN Department of Social Affairs once issued a statement that, 400,000 north Koreans had come to south Korea during the fighting. On January 2, 1954, the Communist delegation reported whether the 300,000 persons taken from north Korea by the UN forces would be returned in the contemplated exchange.
