THURSDAY, APRIL 5, 1951

The situation with regard to the Far Eastern General has become a political one.

The General has made himself a center of controversy, publicly and privately. He has always been a controversial figure.

He has had two wives—one a socialite he married at 42, the other a Japanese girl he married in his mid-twenties fifteen years after he had divorced his first. He was chief of staff in the Army regime.

He was a front-page wire photo, the most ill-fated wire photo, as the President of the Philippines and Supreme Commander in the Pacific in World War II.

Made Chief of Allied Command in the Pacific to sign the surrender documents for the United States.

Made Chief of the occupying forces and Allied Commander for the United Nations forces in Korea in June 1950.
