The situation with regard to the far eastern general has become a political one.

Mr. Bush has made himself a center of controversy, publicly and privately, he has always been a controversial figure.

He has had two wives—one a social light he married at 51, the other a Japanese girl he married in his middle fifties after he had divorced her. He was chief of staff in the Hoover regime, made the front pages in the Tokyo affair. He was ambassador to the President of the Philippines and Supreme Commander of the Pacific in World War II.

Made him Allied Commander in Chief in Japan to sign the surrender document for the United States.

Made Chief of the occupying forces and Allied Commander for the United Nations forces in Korea in June 1950.
