The situation with respect to the far eastern general has become a political one.

He has made himself a center of controversy, public and private, in these last few years.

He has had two wives—one a social light—she married at 18, the other a Japanese girl he married at his middle fifties, after his first divorce, was the one who held the center of the scene. He is the only son of the President of the Philippines and Supreme Commander in the Pacific in World War II.

Made chief of Allied Commander in Chief in Japan to sign the surrender documents by the United States.

Made Chief of the occupying force and Allied Commander for the United Nations forces in Korea in June 1950.